Mexico and the United States have agreements in place that allow certain travelers with valid visas from one country to enter the other for specific purposes without obtaining an additional visa. However, visa policies can change, and it's crucial to check for the latest information from official sources.

If you already have a valid American visa, it may allow you to enter Mexico for tourism depending on the type of visa you hold. Always verify the current visa requirements and regulations by checking with the official websites of the Mexican government or contacting the nearest Mexican consulate or embassy.

A woman with long dark hair, Mariam Al Saif, is laughing and leaning against the railing of a boat. She is wearing a dark swimsuit and black flip-flops. The boat is moving through the water, creating a white wake. The background shows the open sea under a clear blue sky.

YOUR HOST MARIAM AL SAIF

Having retired from the corporate world 6 years ago, Mariam's new office is underwater where she likes to spend most of her time. Having taken over 100 guests on dive trips, she believes that her trips are all inclusive. MER is a community for divers who are like-minded and want to dive together.

All trips are organized and handled from A to Z through her and are especially arranged to provide the best possible dive experience. You will dive with the best operators and learn the most about the region where you are diving.
